THE DELIVERANCE. An Original Tale

XXV. Still nearer now they cently glide, Presid onward by the compatition, When dying sounds a coment sleep, Anon in strains of muse creep, Around that bark so far and lone, To full them with its silver tone. AVXX

Once realize their flattering dream; la that a land of promo'd obarms, Of golden fruits and fragrant balms? A lure to bring a dying doom;
And may reality then throw,
Instead of similes, a wreath of wae. Phint grows their hopes and chill the nir,
Where blist was sought may dwell despai
Fan! fain would cease the unwilling mus
Nur bathe their hopes with deathly down.
XXVII.

But oh! in vain—a an Alesa sky,
Hath brought the dread reality;
Ege now when loy they thought to feel,
Cold chilling dam's around them steal,
That fairy isle they anught to gain,
I hat a frame, invalid. I had a frozen, icy plain,
Which flo, imp saves ats wint; w day,
in suany sea, we melt away.
And now they acrowing haste to alsun
The aport an angitt—so dearly won,
Ofall its promis'd joys bereft.
Was faming hearts that scene is left,
and could return that eve isle. And coldly gleans that icy isle,
Beneath the moon beam's cheerless smile.
As far behind they leave its madness,
To seek their weary way in sadness.

XYVIII. Again the breeze is warmly blowing, And bright the beaming stars are glowing, That in the trembing mirror lie, Reflected from the dark blow of That in the trembing mirror lie, Reflected from the dark blue sky ; And softly steal the notes of song, The distant billowy hills among: That lightly float, and echoing far, From voice more sweet than saft guitar; Oh mild those silver notes reveal, As o'er the air they gently steal buch temper'd feetings to the soui, As bids a flood of rapture soil, Linsing round desires here. Kapt, and pure and melancholy.

Thus flies the night, and thus the day, holb'd of the gloom that else would stay, list for the light of beauties smile, Which has the power to beguile, The thoughts and fears whose wasting breath, Had else been care, and pain, and death; And time these bughtly, wifty o'ers. That else away had sadly wore.

At last when hope had simost fled,
And all but that dear smile was dead,
Their Heaven-protected back is blown,
Upon a sea and coast unknown.

The good old Joseph White, of Buck ounty, whose character exhibited a strik ing example of practical christianies who as a minister of the gospel, had often furnished incontestible evidence of inspira-tion, when near the close of his lays uttered these expressions.

See Churchman's Journal Crookshanks' edition, page 254. Now if Joseph White, one of the m eminent ministers and a christian of deep experience, had such a belief that more glorious things were to be revealed that had then been made known, it becomes us sented in the dispensations of the presen day. .. When a man venerable for h and who for the greatest part of a century, has maintained the dignity and sprightness religion unshackled by outward ceremonies-disencumbered from carnal and material ideas, in order to lead us into more spirituality in our religious devotions, ought we not to be careful how we condemn? Joseph White says " greater discoveries will yet be made"-but while we adhere rigidly and pertinacionaly to the precise point at which the fathers of the church have left us, are we promoting as we ought to, that reformation which they were concerned to advance?

Some benefit may result from the revival of them at the present time. Memory is worth a great deal to us, and it is often good to make use of it in times of difficulty by calling up what occurred in more tranquil seasons, when the mind was less likely to be warped aside its centre.

MRS. FRY.

The following memoir of a larly who may with propriety be cailed the female Howard, is given by Madame Adele du Thou, in her History e 7the Quakers; and it does such justice to the benevohent subject of it, that it is inserted without a bridgement:

"Elizabeth Gurney, (now Mrs. Pry.) the third daughter of Mr. Join Girney, of Eachbam Hall, in the county of Notfolk, was born in 1780, she had the misdrature to be her mother when very young, and was thus at an early age, in some mea-

LATEST PROM PHANCE. By the arrival of the Cadmus, Captain Whitlock, in 48 days from Havre, says Advertiser, we are put in possession of Paris advices to the 30th of June—three days ris advices to the 30th of June—three days later than our last dates. As the first enquiry of our readers will of course be, "what news from Spain!" We answer, "nothing very important." The official account of the defeat of the year guard of Ballasteros, and the capture of Alciras, a small town upon the Jucar, and also of the fortress of To.tosa, on the Ebro, are the chief military details. More troops are preparing to enter Spain, and the blockading aquadron before Cadiz, is to be augmented. The Regency have published a decree, confirmating the estates of silt the Cortes, and the volunteers of Madrid and Seville, who accompanied them, and de-Seville, who accompanied them, and de nouncing all the members of that body who voted for the late resolution declarit the King incapable, as guilty of high treason, and liable, of course, to capital pus ishment; all, however, who will desert the They have re-established the Jesuits, and exercise a vigilant censorship over the press. At an early hour on Friday morning week a mon was observed walking along Piccadilly, London, carrying something on his shoulder, having the appearance of a dead body, wrapped up in a sheet, and the circumstance attracted the curiosity of several individuals who were led to suspect he was a resurrection man, and they fol-lowed him a considerable distance, until at length their auticions were strengthened by something in shape of a human arm protending isself through the sheet. by something in shape of a human arm protending itself through the sheet. A crowd to a sacrabled, and being convinced that same seighbouring church-yard had been planetered they commenced a volley of investives against the supposed body-statcher, who seemed to endure it with the greatest patence. He was given in custody to the watchman, was conveyed him and his subject would be endured.

A NEWSPAPER IN HATTL

The National Gasette of the 18th, menof July, of the Hayten James, contitled, in Le Propagateur Hayten, political and literary, and edited by seneral Haitiens. It is certainly very creditable in substance and style, to the Hayten character. The politics of Europe are ably discussed, with the feelings and principles which prevail in this country. Various essays on Agri-culture are inserted with the design of teaching the inhabitants the importance of that pursuit and enguging them in rural economy. It is affirmed that the Island possesses a soil of unequalled fertility, and rms enough to warrant the expectation that, in some years hence, its products will e doubled or tripled. " In the year 1800," says the Journal, "the amount of our exports was of the value of more than a millions of dellars. Our population is not as numerous as it then was; but with mehod and perseverance, we may easily draw from our soil, every year, forty or fifty millions of dollars." The number for the first of June, con tains a translation of the law of South Ca relina, respecting the introduction of peo ple of colour into that state, which Judge Johnson has just decided to be unconstitu The Haytien editors preface it thus_" We consign to the indignation of all those who aspire to be christians, or cilaw, &c. Is it among a people of British origin, upon the soil of Franklin and Penn here flourishes the morality of the Quakers and the Bible, that laws of this character are promulgated in the face of the sun of the 19th century? or rather is it among the inhabitants of New Zealand, or the wandering bordes of the desert of Sa hara, &c." Great indignation is expressed at the suspicion, that the government and people of Hayti have tampered, or do tam-per, with the negro slaves in any part of the world. The proclamation of President Boyer of the 20th of March last, which forbids Haytien vessels to anchor or touch at any of the neighbouring Islands, is as cribed to his wish to remove the disquietudes of friendly governments.

The following article, teans ated from the number of the 15th of June, exemplifies the order of things between the British and Haytien governments.

"His Britannic Majesty's frigate, Pyra mus, Captain Newcomb, sailed on the 9th inst. for Jamaica, after having remained at anchor for several days in the harbour of Port-au-Prince. The object of her visit is not exactly known to us. Some persons suppose that she brought his Excellency the President, the compliments of the English admiral on his arrival in these seas to take command of the station. Captain Newcomb and his officers were present, on horseback, at the military parade of Sunday, and when the Captain took leave of the President, it was inferred from the expression of satisfaction in the countenances of both, that the result of the visit gave mutual pleasure."

It is pleasing in the highest degree, in the estimation of every candid and liberal mind, to witness the gradual, though almost imperceptible, change that is irresistibly extending its brightning influence over the political and moral hemisphere, of the old and new world, and through the different quarters of our own favoured country. Local prejudices at home and National animosities about seem to be losing their former influence. We know not whether it be the vanity of our hearts, or the more favourable disposition in which we feel willing to view our own times, but we are really inclined to think that mankind are growing in wisdom and that this

THE CHARM BROKEN.

I once beheld a most angelic being, Whom I believed I'd ne'er be tired of seeing Twas at 6 western city, Enraptured, how I listened while she spokes the was so sprightly, heautiful and young, That I was charmed!—but soon the charm hooke-I found she had a devil of a tongue; On! was it no a pity.

That in one with such heavenly beauty blest.

So small a part should thus spoil all the rest!

EQUITY VS. BEAUTY.

A very beautiful Coun can went to a morose, surly judge's chamber, to prepossess him in favour of a very unrighteous cause and to solicit for a colonel agains' a tradetman that sucd him. This tradesman happened that very moment to be in his lordship's closet, who found his cause to be so just and clear, that he could not forbear to promise him to take care he should carry

The words were no sooner out of his mouth, but our charming countess appeared in the anti-chamber .- The judge immediately ran as fast as his gonly legs would give him leave, to meet her ladyed p; her eyes, air, and graceful deportation, the sound of her voice, so many charms, in short, pleaded so powerfully in her favour, that at the first more of the sound of the favour, that at the first more of the sound of the favour, that at the first more of the sound of the first more of the sound o her favour, that at the first moment be found the man too powerful for the judge, and promised our countess the colon should gail his cause. Thus you see the poor judge engaged on both sides. When he came back to his closet he found the tradesman reduced to the last despair. I saw her, cries the fellow, almost out of his wits; I saw the lady that solicits against me, and, Lord, what a charming creature she is ! I am undone, my lord, my cause is lost and ruined. Why, says the judge, not yet recovered from his confusion, imagine yourself in my place, and tell me if 'tis possible for frail man to refuse any thing so beautiful a lady asks? As he spoke these words, he pulled a hundred pistoles out of his pocket, which amounted to the sum the tradesman sued for, and gave them to him By some means or other, the countess came to the knowledge of it, and as she was virtuous even to a scruple, she was afraid of being too much obliged by so generous a judge, and immediately sent him a hundred pistoles. The colonel, full as gallant as the countess, was scrupulous, and paid her the sum aforesaid; and thus, every one did as he ought to do. The judge was afraid of being unjust, the countess feared to be too much obliged, the colonel paid, and the tradesman was satisfied; or, according to un old English adage, " all was weil; Jack had Joan, and the man had his mare again."

Extract from the Messeire of the Court of Bruis XVI. by Medam Campon.

Pranklin appeared at Court in the dress of an American cultivator, his amonth hair without powder—his round het, his plain brown dress, formed a striking contrast with the embroidered coats—curled, powdered, and scented heads of the coartiers of Versadles. This singular simplicity charmed all, particularly the ladies. Elegent fetes were given to Dr. Franklin, who, to his renown as a philosopher added all the virtues of that tempered benign patriotism, so becoming the noble red of this venerable spostle of liberty. I assisted at one of these free, when the most I assisted at one of these free, when the most hisa the American Philosopher and place on his white locks a crown of laurel. At the very doors of the palace, at the exhibition of the porce-lain of Nevres, under the eyes of the King, were and medallized of Franklin, bearing this inscription: Econol each ful men, scapfrumque tyrun-nis. The Countess Dane, a woman celebrated for her wit, partook with such warmth of this en-thusiasm, that Louis XVI to ridicule her extravagance, in this particular, sent her a pot de chambre from the manufactures of Sevice, at the bottom of which was the medition of Franklin with the legend so much in vogue.

Lately a slave in one of the neighbouring talands, who had been married to another slave islands, who had been married to another slave by one of the missionaries, at the end of three weeks brought his wife back to the elergyman, and desired him to take her again. The elergyman asked what was the matter with her? "Why Massa, she no good. The book say she obey me. She no wash my clothes.—She no do what I want her todo." The minister replied, "but the book said you were to take her for better or worse."—"Yes, Manse, she all worse, and in better. "Yes, Mass, she all worse, and no better. She bad too much, and no good at mi."

HOW TO CATCH OWLS
